Branding options for individual personalisation

Laser Engraving

Laser engraving is traditionally used to brand metal substrates and offers a higher perceived value than line colour printing or full colour digital printing. Concentrated energy is supplied via a crystal rod in the form of light which removes the surface material to reveal the base metal.

Full Colour

Direct digital printing utilises ink jet technology - ring microscopic droplets of ink on top of one another to create an almost limitless spectrum of colours, gradients and shades enabling photo realistic images to be printed directly to the product surface.

Dye Sublimation

Transferring a digitally printed transfer paper onto a product via heat to produce stunning detailed full colour results with superb adhesion. As high heat and pressure are used for dye sublimation, only specific products and materials can be branded using this process. Dye sublimation is limited to white or very light coloured substrates due to the ink technology.

Micro-Mat

The Micro-Mat is a slimline 2-in-1 mouse mat manufactured with a top layer of microfibre material to clean your device. The base has a fine rubber backing ensuring the product stays in position, while the top layer provides the perfect environment for stunning full colour dye sublimation printing.
